What is Rural Development?

Is it this?
What is Rural Development?

Rural Development is the process of improving the quality of life, social and economic well-being of people living in rural areas.

It is a distinct approach to interventions by the state in the social life and economies of underdeveloped counties. It is broader and more specific than 'agricultural development'.
It is as much about engaging people in a process to support projects/services/community as it is to provide direct financial and physical interventions.

1. Social Enterprises

4,000 JOBS IN RURAL AREAS OVER 10 YEARS

Employment is key to the future of rural areas.

Over the next ten years, 4,000 jobs will be created. Communities will develop social enterprises to provide essential local services, tourism information and enterprise supports.

The achievement of these employment targets will be supported by Enterprise Ireland, the Local Enterprise Office (LEO), the Office of the Action Plan for Jobs (APJ) and the LEADER Programme.

A special rural and community support unit in Clare County Council will assist in this development.

A supportive entrepreneurial environment will be fostered by the development of local Hi-speed Broadband Hubs throughout the county.

Our social enterprise employs skilled staff and delivers high-quality care, social support and training services to elderly local people in the community.

It is managed by a local voluntary board of directors.

2. Community Run Multi-Service Centres

Example: West Clare Resource Centre, Miltown Malbay

A full range of public services is key to ensuring people continue to live in and are attracted to rural areas.

By offering a range of public services from a single building, the public will be facilitated and service providers’ overheads reduced. This will minimise the risk of closures and/or contraction. Health services, including GP services, postal services, Social Protection services, Advice/Information services (e.g., Neasdas), Transport services, Garda services could all be provided in such centres.

The community will provide the premises, administration and management of such centres. The scale of these facilities will depend on the scale of their respective catchments.

Our multi-service centre replaced the vacant Vocational School and provides the services of a Dental Clinic, Child Health room, Community Welfare Office, Public Library, Youthreach, Adult Education Centre, Elderly Care Unit, Childcare and an e-Learning Centre.

3. Co-operating Towns and Parishes

Co-operating Towns and Partnering Parishes will drive the re-vitalisation of Rural Clare.

In order to ensure that public investment represents value for money and that private investment achieves an attractive return, neighbouring towns will combine and neighbouring parishes will partner each other to achieve greater scale. Combining towns will work with their satellite villages to achieve a sufficiently large population that will justify a hierarchy of investment. In the more open countryside, parishes will work together to combine their complementary assets and develop products of quality and scale that can be marketed nationally and internationally.

These types of co-operative endeavour are already visible in church parish clusters and GAA amalgamations. The combining towns and partnering parishes will be assisted by a specially developed ‘Rural and Community Support Unit’ within Clare County Council.

I encounter GAA clubs whose backs are often to the well before they address the problem of declining player numbers. However, there are also many positive examples of clubs that have been reinvigorated through amalgamation – a lesson in how towns and parishes can co-operate now in order to thrive later.

Our Diocese has commenced a re-structuring involving ‘clusters of parishes’ to address failing rural populations and declining numbers of priests. Our Pastoral Plan, Builders of Hope, seeks to rejuvenate local parishes with new models of participation and leadership of faith communities.

The ‘Clare Digital Strategy’ is an integral support of rural enterprise, rural life and global communication.

By building ‘Intelligent Communities’ local people, enterprises and entrepreneurs are assured of access to high speed broadband in their own community. A number of dedicated ‘digital hubs’ will be established throughout the county. Hot desks will provide high speed broadband access that will facilitate E-working, small-scale training and conferencing.

The Clare Digital Strategy will ensure that communities have the skills and competencies to prosper in the broadband economy. It will ensure that entrepreneurs, visitors and local people, irrespective of their sector (agriculture, tourism, local services, international businesses, etc.) are able to use digital technologies.

This is exactly the kind of forward thinking initiative that we need to ensure the success of rural regeneration in this county.

5. Managing the Environment

Our environment is our very life – the air we breathe, the food we eat, the water we drink, the energy we use and the tranquility we desire.

It is our cultural inspiration, the reflection of our heritage - a home that we share with many other diverse life forms. The health of our environment impacts on our health. Our way of life impacts on our environment. This is a mutually nurturing, but fragile, interaction. What we have inherited we must bequeath to the next generations. The consideration and management of our environment is at the heart of all the actions proposed in our Action Plan. This Strategy will draw on various environmental and conservation programmes (e.g. Green Ways, LEADER, Agri-Environmental Schemes, LIFE, etc) to achieve enhanced quality standards.

Our Burren Programme will invest up to €3m of public funding annually in rewarding farmers for their active care of this outstanding landscape. The programme will also bring jobs, increase business for local suppliers and underpin a sustainable tourism industry but most importantly will help maintain the valuable social fabric of north Clare and contribute to the wellbeing of these people and their place.

6. Age Friendly Communities

Ageing is living in delightful anticipation, practical solidarity and comfortable acceptance.

As our social context changes more and more quickly, there is an urgent need to consider all generations and all ages when planning. Regardless of age, people need the assurance of safety and security at home as well as hospitality and welcome in their community.

Never was it more apt to say that ‘what is good for one is good for all’. This strategy fosters intergenerational relationships by creating opportunities for all to participate in the social, cultural and political life of the community, thus facilitating people to live a life that they have reason to desire.

Our inter-generational project involved research on the timings of pedestrian crossings related to the needs of youth, families and elderly. We learned so much more about the need to plan our public and private spaces, facilities and amenities together.

7. Celebrating the Rural Way of Life

Some people are born into and grow to cherish the rural way of life. Others are drawn to it.

The rural way of life is given expression in various creative and artistic activities such as drama, music, song, dance, film, literature, sculpture, art, sport and recreation. It is a rich tapestry of the informal and formal, embracing personal solitude, social exchange and community celebration.

Young people are introduced to the rural way of life at home, in school and in the community. As they get older they enjoy this way of life as an integral part of their daily life. Our strategy supports the various celebrations of rural living by fostering the cultural and artistic life of rural communities.

Our music is inspired by our unique landscape and cultural heritage and draws on our rural way of life. I, like so many other artists, am blessed to live here.

8. Infrastructure - Transport, Education and Water

Modern life, both rural and urban, requires publicly funded infrastructure for Housing, Transport, Education and Water.

Rural housing, both private and public, will be extended to facilitate the stabilisation and growth of the rural population. Innovative rural transport initiatives, such as a type of 'rural Uber', community car pooling, 'pafriending transport' and further community bus initiatives will be developed to supplement the current rural provision.

In conjunction with education, training and learning providers, additional opportunities will be developed that have greater local reach and relevance. The strategy will support the roll out of major and small Water Services infrastructure.

Communities need to start thinking about delivering services in a different way. For instance, a community based lift-sharing service could be developed using a 'Rural Uber-type' phone app. People who want 'a lift to town' could connect with those who are 'going to town anyway'. Or communities could invest in localised electric mini-bus services for residents and visitors alike.
